Gen. Rosecrans' Army.

The government is again in communication with General Rosecrans by telegraph. The injury to the railroad between Nashville and Chattanooga is not so great as reported. The bridge reported destroyed over Stone river was a small one across a tributary of that stream. Communications have been restored. Reinforcements are going forward continually. Gen. Sherman is increasing his army corps, and is already beyond Corinth with a portion of them.

There is a great gathering of troops, on both sides, in the region of Chattanooga, and active operations are expected to commence immediately. The rebels have already opened some of their batteries upon Chattanooga, and ours have replied with some effect. The report that the rebels have 175,000 men at that point is hardly credible, nevertheless, such is its importance that they will regard Bragg all the more that he can spare from other places, and strain every nerve to sustain themselves. If they permit Rosecrans to advance they are aware that their cause is desperate.

The Hope of the Rebels.

A dispatch from Vicksburg states that the Memphis Grenada-Jackson Appeal of the 24th, speaking of their success at Chattanooga, says "we shall now be recognized; our securities will rise; Vallandigham will be elected."

The copperhead candidate for governor in this state, H. L. Palmer, says: "I hope to see the disgraceful assault upon American rights in the person of Vallandigham, culminate in his election to the office of governor of Ohio."

Captures of Gen. Blunt's Staff.

In the account of the capture of Gen. Blunt's staff and body guard mention is made of Lieut. Pond and Major Henning, who were taken prisoners by the enemy. The former formerly resided in this city, and the latter is a major in the cavalry regiment of Col. Barstow.

The rebels are evidently making preparations for a raid upon Missouri and Kansas from two directions. With the military defenses in the hands of conservative rebel sympathizers those states are in a dangerous condition. The true Union men are unarmed while their enemies have just been organized and armed. It is not surprising that they are wild with excitement.

The test vote in Ohio last year was, Republican Union 178,765, Democratic 184,832—Democratic majority 5,577. In Pennsylvania, Republican 215,616, Democratic 218,140—majority for the Democrats 2,624. This year the figures will be reversed, and a large margin.

Any number of newspapers may be sent by mail under a two cent stamp, provided they do not exceed four ounces in weight. This fact, it appears, people will not remember, although it has been frequently published.

Gen. Rosecrans' Army.

Special Correspondent of the Daily Gazette.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Sept. 23, 1863.

Editors Gazette: Since I wrote to you last we have wandered somewhat around the sacred territory of D. sie, and are now quietly resting from our toils in this much coveted by Jeff Davis place.

About a month ago a party of our signal detachment was ordered to go on a station on a spur of the Cumberland mountains, near Jasper, called Waldron's ridge. About that time the whole army began to move from Stevenson, Bridgeport and Bellefonte, to invest this place. I need scarcely spend time or space to tell you of all the minor movements of the army which resulted in the rebel evacuation and federal occupation of this very important rebel stronghold, on the 9th inst. What a thrill of joy passed through our whole system when we read the telegram to Gen. Rosecrans, on the evening of the 8th inst., telling him the enemy had evacuated Chattanooga.

On the 14th inst., Gen. McCook having completed his reconnaissance of the enemy's movements in the direction of Rome, Ga., and Gen. Rosecrans finding the enemy concentrating a large force in the vicinity of the Pigeon mountains, to try to defeat us and retake this place, as well as crush the army of the Cumberland, he ordered Gen. McCook to cross Lookout mountain and join the balance of the army, then in the valley between Lookout and Pigeon mountains, with all possible dispatch. This movement was necessary to prevent the enemy from massing on Gen. Thomas and Crittenden, crushing them and again occupying this place. The 20th army corps moved with all possible dispatch over the very mountainous country it was compelled to traverse, and by the 17th was nearly all encamped in McLamores' cove, about twenty miles from here. Gen. Thomas was encamped farther down the valley, and Gen. Crittenden still farther down, was encamped on the western bank of the Chickamauga creek. Pigeon mountains were on the front of our army and the rebels held the several gaps through the range.

From our signal station on an elevated point of Lookout Mountain, we could see through Bluebird and Dog Gaps, and see the rebel force concentrating for this terrible blow. For three days we could see the troops as they moved down the road toward the stream where the 21st army corps was posted, and every night could see and note their camp fires.

On the 17th and 18th they made a complete reconnaissance of our lines, and secured a number of the fort in the Chickamauga. Gen. Rosecrans being now well aware of the intention of the enemy was to mass his whole vastly superior force on our left, turn it, push a strong column into this place, and at the same time press our army up the valley where we would have no water, where we would be cut off from our supplies, and with a high mountain range at our back, he at his mercy, made the necessary arrangements to checkmate any such a move on the chess-board of war.

On the morning of Saturday, the 19th, the battle began on Gen. Crittenden, who was by a time compelled to fight the whole rebel force, but Gen. Thomas and McCook soon came up. The ground lost by Crittenden was regained, the enemy steadily forced back, and night closed with the odds in favor of our arms. True, we had lost a number of very valuable officers, among whom was Col. H. C. Key, of the 13th Wisconsin volunteers, commanding the 1st brigade, Gen. J. C. Davis' division. You know him well, as our old state prison commissioner. He had the name of being a fine officer, and certainly had a fine regiment of strong and brave men.

We had lost some guns, but had captured others. We had lost some prisoners, but had captured many more. Gen. R. W. Johnson's division of this army corps, which was so severely handled at Stone River, now covered itself with glory. It killed, wounded and took prisoners more men than it took into action. The night closed in with our men very hopeful, even against the terrible numbers of Hill, Longstreet and Bragg.

On Sunday, the 20th, about nine o'clock, the enemy began the attack again on Gen. Thomas, who repulsed them three times, but finding his men somewhat worn, he sent for more troops, and Gen. McCook had just started to help him when Hill and Longstreet attacked this corps with their whole force. The onset was terrible, men and officers fell like grass before the scythe, brigades were crushed before they could get into line of battle, and the corps was cut off from the remainder of the army, with the loss of many men and officers, among whom is Gen. Lytle, of Sheridan's division. He fell while trying to rally his men. Gen. Rosecrans tried to rally those overpowered regiments. He rode into the thickest of the fight, and urged the men to charge once more, but it was of no avail.

The battle now raged terribly, the roar of cannon was like one long continued thunder peal, while the rattle of the musketry was like the rushing of a mountain torrent which bore down all before it. It was now about 11 o'clock and the enemy captured our hospitals at Crawfish Springs, with about 2,000 of our wounded. But true to their instincts they had to shell the camp before they could let it alone. Gen. McCook made the best of his way by a circuitous route to the rear of Gen. Thomas, where the most of his men again reformed, and were a bit in fight before night.

The terrible storm now turned and veiled its fury on Gens. Thomas and Granger. Their men were at once in position in the form of a half circle, on the crest of a hill. Against this line the rebel wave dashed in all its wild fury, until night, but the wall stood firm as a rock. Gens. Thomas and Granger were on all parts of the field, encouraging the men and holding up our line against the terrible storm of shot, shell, and bullets, which fell on it. Night came at last; blessed harbinger of rest, and our weary, overworked, but hopeful men still kept back and every where of our men a kind of Union men—their names, who, as General Sherman expressed it, stand by the government, no matter what it does, and the false, who plead its aid.

Scott and Pomeroy's cavalry have been driving Byrd and Woolford about the country yesterday and to-day, but this afternoon the tables were turned, and the rebels were driven back from Philadelphia and Sweetwater.

Last Night's Report.

LEAVENSWORTH, Oct. 8.

Special to Chicago Tribune.—I have just received a letter from A. McDonald to his brother in this city, dated Fort Scott, Oct. 7th, which contains the following startling news:

Fort Scott, Kansas, Oct. 7. A messenger, Lieut. Tappan, of Blunt's staff, has just arrived from Baxter's Springs. He says all the staff and body guards have been captured, including the commander, Lieut. Pond, at Baxter's Springs.

It is not certain that the General has escaped, but he had got away ten miles when Tappan left.

Every available man has left, or is leaving this place. The rebels are under Quantrell, Gordon and Hunter, and number 1,400, and are marching on this place. Whether they will slaughter and kill no one knows. Henning and Curtis of the staff have been taken. Curtis' horse was shot. Intense excitement here. There is no danger of Fort Scott being taken, as we are abundantly able to protect this point.

NASHVILLE, Oct. 8. Special to Chicago Times.—There is no communication with the front to-day, but it is the belief that both telegraph and railroad will be in operation by to-morrow.

The affair at Glasgow was a shameful one. The rebels numbered but 82. The federals, consisting of the 37th Kentucky, were over 300, with fortifications and artillery. The garrison was completely surprised, and surrendered with but a faint resistance. The rebels took $10,000 from the bank, and all the fresh horses they could find.

The latest intelligence from the front represents everything quiet, with the prospect of an early attack by the rebels. Such a disposition of troops has been made along the railroad that heretofore no permanent interruption of communication will be likely to occur. Trains are expected to commence running through to Stevenson to-morrow.

The train of last evening was fired into by a party of guerrillas near Franklin, on the Louisville and Nashville railroad. No body hurt.

FORTRESS MONROE, Oct. 5.

The Richmond Enquirer of to-day contains the following:

MISSIONARY RIDGE, Oct. 5. We opened upon Chattanooga at 1 A. M. from Lookout mountain and points near our line. Our shells exploded in the enemy's camp, as well as in the city, setting fire to one house.

The enemy replied briskly from Moccasin point to our mortars on Lookout, and heavily from Star fort. The firing still continues.

October 6.

The Tennessee river is rising rapidly. It has swept away the lower portion of the bridge of the enemy, and submerged his train bridge.

Major Mitchell, Chief Quartermaster General of Longstreet's corps, died last night.

There has been no firing on either side up to 11 o'clock to-day.

St. Johns, N. E., Oct. 8.

The steams in Columbia, from Liverpool the 24th via Galway, arrived on route for New York at 1 o'clock last evening (Wednesday).

Peace Democrats' Head

The Richmond Examiner of September 29 contains a report of proceedings in the legislature of rebel Virginia, of the previous day, from which we make the following:

Peace men are respectfully invited to "read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest" the same:

SO FARLEY WITH THE NORTH.

Mr. Miller, of Lee, Scott and Wise, offered a preamble and resolution, the reception or consideration of which was refused by a unanimous vote of the house, that body indefinitely postponing the subject, nem. con.

The preamble and resolution are as follows:

WHEREAS, It has been represented that many of the people of the United States are in favor of terminating the war now unhappily existing between the Confederate States and the United States, and have so expressed themselves in primary meetings and conventions, and that some of the northern states, through their legislatures, have been proposing measures looking to a termination of the present war; be it, therefore,

Resolved, That a committee be appointed for the purpose of inquiring into any action on the part of any of the people of the United States, whether in primary meetings, conventions, or through legislative bodies, relative to a termination of the present war, and whether such action has been taken by any part of the people of the United States as would justify the status of Virginia in adopting such measures and recommendations not inconsistent with the honor of the state or of the Confederate States, as would tend to bring about an armistice between the two nations and a fair and honorable termination of the war.

Mr. Morgan, of Marion, moved the indefinite postponement of this preamble and resolution, whereupon they were summarily squelched, as above stated.

East Tennessee.

One other element in the situation deserves especial mention, and that is the loyal East Tennesseans. Under General Order No. 15, the entire loyal population is being made the auxiliary of the most powerful kind. In this portion of the State the organization has been effected so that now the number armed and ready for service is fully fifteen thousand. In addition to the National Guard for home defense, large numbers are enlisting in the volunteer service. Col. Crawford, who is forming an artillery regiment, gets recruits as fast as he can provide for them, having already procured eight hundred; and on yesterday alone, Lieut. Col. Brownlow received twenty six for his regiment, the 9th Tennessee cavalry. This is very encouraging, as showing that the mass of the people of East Tennessee are ready to do something more than talk for their country. While this is true of the great body, there are many of the leading men of Knoxville who are indulging in a northern copperhead species of Unionism. The Bulletin has been discussing the everlasting nigger question, telling them in plain words that slavery is dead. They do not like it; they complained to provost marshals, to adjutant generals, to generals themselves, that the country was not ready for such a sort of thing; but the Bulletin kept on until it had said all it had to say on the subject.

Gen. Rosecrans' Army.

The government is again in communication with General Rosecrans by telegraph. The injury to the railroad between Nashville and Chattanooga is not so great as reported. The bridge reported destroyed over Stone river was a small one across a tributary of that stream. Communications have been restored. Reinforcements are going forward continually. Gen. Sherman is increasing his army corps, and is already beyond Corinth with a portion of them. There is a great gathering of troops, on both sides, in the region of Chattanooga, and active operations are expected to commence immediately. The rebels have already opened some of their batteries upon Chattanooga, and ours have replied with some effect. The report that the rebels have 175,000 men at that point is hardly credible, nevertheless, it is its importance that they will send Bragg all the men they can spare from other places, and strain every nerve to sustain themselves. If they permit Rosecrans to advance they are aware that their cause is desperate.

The Hopes of the Rebels.

A dispatch from Vicksburg states that the Memphis Grenada-Jackson Appeal of the 24th, speaking of their success at Chattanooga, says "we shall now be recognized; our securities will rise; Vallandigham will be elected."

The copperhead candidate for governor in this state, H. L. Palmer, says:

I hope to see the disgraceful assault upon American rights in the person of Vallandigham, culminate in his election to the office of governor of Ohio.

The expectations of a rebel in Mississippi are not very different from the hopes of a copperhead in Wisconsin.

Captain of Gen. Blunt's Staff.

In the account of the capture of Gen. Blunt's staff and body guard mention is made of Lieut. Pond and Major Henning, who were taken prisoners by the enemy. The former formerly resided in this city, and the latter is a major in the cavalry regiment of Col. Barstow.

The rebels are evidently making preparations for a raid upon Missouri and Kansas from two directions. With the military defenses in the hands of conservative rebel sympathizers those states are in a dangerous condition. The Union men are unarmed while their enemies have just been organized and armed. It is not surprising that they are wild with excitement.

The test vote in Ohio last year was, Republican Union 178,765, Democratic 184,332—Democratic majority 5,577. In Pennsylvania, Republican 215,619, Democratic 218,140—majority for the Democrats 2,624. This year the figures will be reversed, and a large margin.

Any number of newspapers may be sent by mail under a two cent stamp, provided they do not exceed four ounces in weight. This foot, it appears, people will not remember, although it has been frequently published.

About a month ago a party of our signal detachment was ordered to go on a station on a spur of the Cumberland mountains, near Jasper, called Waldron's ridge. About that time the whole army began to move from Stevenson, Bridgeport and Bellefonte, to invest this place. I need scarcely spend time or space to tell you of all the minor movements of the army which resulted in the rebel evacuation and federal occupation of this very important rebel stronghold, on the 9th inst. What a thrill of joy passed through our whole system when we read the telegram to Gen. Rosecrans, on the evening of the 8th inst., telling him the enemy had evacuated Chattanooga.

On the 14th inst., Gen. McCook having completed his reconnoissance of the enemy's movements in the direction of Rome, Ga., and Gen. Rosecrans finding the enemy concentrating a large force in the vicinity of the Pigeon mountains, to try to defeat us and retake this place, as well as crush the army of the Cumberland, he ordered Gen. McCook to cross Lookout mountain and join the balance of the army, then in the valley between Lookout and Pigeon mountains, with all possible dispatch. This movement was necessary to prevent the enemy from massing on Gen. Thomas and Crittenden, crushing them and again occupying this place. The 26th army corps moved with all possible dispatch over the very mountainous country it was compelled to traverse, and by the 17th was nearly all encamped in McLamora's cove, about twenty miles from here. Gen. Thomas was encamped farther down the valley, and Gen. Crittenden still farther down, was encamped on the western bank of the Chickamauga creek. Pigeon mountains were on the front of our army and the rebels held the several gaps through the range.

From our signal station on an elevated point of Lookout Mountain, we could see through Bluebird and Dog Gaps, and see the rebel force concentrating for this terrible blow. For three days we could see the troops as they moved down the road toward the stream where the 21st army corps was posted, and every night could see and note their camp fires.

On the 17th and 18th they made a complete reconnoissance of our lines, and secured a number of the fords on the Chickamauga. Gen. Rosecrans being now well aware the intention of the enemy was to mass his whole vastly superior force on our left, turn it, push a strong column into this place, and at the same time press our army up the valley where we would have no water, where we would be cut off from our supplies, and with a high mountain range at our back, be at his mercy, made the necessary arrangements to checkmate any such move on the chessboard of war.

On the morning of Saturday, the 19th, the battle began on Gen. Crittenden, who was far too compelled to fight the whole rebel force, but Gen. Thomas and McCook soon came up. The ground lost by Crittenden was regained, the enemy steadily forced back, and night closed with the odds in favor of our army. True, we had lost a number of very valuable officers, among whom was Col. H. C. Hog, of the 15th Wisconsin volunteers, commanding the 3d brigade, Gen. J. C. Davis' division. You know him well, as our old state prison commissioner. He had the name of being a fine officer, and certainly had a fine regiment of strong and brave men.

We had lost some guns, but had captured others. We had lost some prisoners, but had captured many more. Gen. E. W. Johnson's division of this army corps, which was so severely handled at Stone River, now covered itself with glory. It killed, wounded and took prisoners more men than it took itself. The night closed in with our men very hopeful, even against the terrible numbers of Hill, Longstreet and Bragg.

On Sunday, the 20th, about nine o'clock, the enemy began the attack again on Gen. Thomas, who repulsed them three times, but finding his men somewhat worn, he sent for more troops, and Gen. McCook had just started to help him when Hill and Longstreet attacked this corps with their whole force. The onset was terrible, men and officers fell like grass before the scythe, and got into line of battle, and the corps was cut off from the remainder of the army, with the loss of many men and officers, among whom was Gen. Lytle, of Sheridan's division. He fell while trying to rally his men. Gen. Rosecrans tried to rally those overpowered regiments. He rode into the thickest of the fight, and urged the men to charge once more, but it was of no avail. The battle now raged terribly, the roar of cannon was like one long continued thunder peal, while the ratio of the musketry was like the rushing of a mountain torrent which bore down all before it.

It was now about 11 o'clock and the enemy captured our hospitals at Crawfish Springs, with about 2,000 of our wounded. But true to their instincts they had to shell the camp before they could let it alone. Gen. McCook made the best of his way by a circuitous route to the rear of Gen. Thomas, where the most of his men again reformed, and were again in fight before night.

The terrible storm now turned and vented its fury on Gen. Thomas and Granger. Their men were at once in position in the form of a half circle, on the crest of a hill. Against this line the rebel were dashed in all its wild fury, until night, but the wall stood firm as a rock.

Gen. Thomas and Granger were on all parts of the field, encouraging the men and holding up our line against the terrible storm of shot, shell, and bullets, which fell on it. Night came at last; blessed balm of rest, and our weary, overworked, but hopeful men still back to the life of rebel fury. In rain had been the terrible onset of Longstreet, the coming of Hill, and the rage of Bragg, with all their vast host of followers.

Our little band was not crushed—our wounded were most all in Chattanooga—our trains were all safe and the army was secure. The rebels may claim just what they please in this battle, but they were defeated, and that too by one-half their force. They collected the flower of their army, and many of their best leaders here to crush at a single blow this army, but now we hold the place fought for and they stay a defeated, and crest fallen foe outside, mourning the loss of a dozen able generals and thousands of their best men.

Bragg's own words are very true. As he will yet find out. "The enemy still confront me," yes, and will continue to do so until you are driven even out of Georgia.

Sunday night the army fell back to Rossville, where it remained until Monday night, when it fell back to this place. The enemy made one attack Monday, but were haudously repulsed. At Rossville we could hold the enemy at bay but not so easy as we can here.

Since we arrived here, Tuesday morning, our men have been busy throwing up works, and now we have three good lines of defense, with smooth open fields in front. Let the foe come on now and we will slay them as fast as they have any desire to fall. Since we arrived here the enemy has advanced close up to our front, and now our lines are very near his, and skirmishing is of hourly occurrence, but beyond that there is no fighting.

When we first arrived here the place was full of all sorts of rebel rumors of federal defeat. They had Stevenson and Bridgeport captured, and even Murfreesboro and Nashville in imminent danger. Sad tales there were of regiments and brigades, which were all gone, but which now have a goodly number of men in rank.

During the last month I have roamed considerable in East Tennessee, and a little in northern Georgia and Alabama. In that section of the country a strong loyal sentiment lives, even to this day, and has always been steadfast to the government; amid all its dark days. The women and children have plowed the land, planted and tended the crops, while the men have been hidden in mountain caves to avoid the rebel hounds, who hunted them by day and night. In a number of these settlements, companies of loyal men are rapidly filling up, for home defense. Even in this place there is a strong loyal feeling.

The country roundabout here shows plainly the footprints of war. Shops are closed, houses deserted or burned down, women and children living in the open air, the whole place looking careworn and weary.

The rebel fortifications of this place are by no means as formidable as I expected to find them. Nature did considerable to make this a strong place, but Bragg did very little.

The rebels are busy getting guns into position on the side of Lookout mountain, and I expect music here soon.

Well, I must close, before I weary both you and your reader. J. M. KIMBALL.

Peace Democrats, Read!

The Richmond Examiner of September 20 contains a report of proceedings in the legislature of rebel Virginia, of the previous day, from which we make the following extract. Peace men are respectfully invited to read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest it the same:

NO PARLEY WITH THE NORTH.
Mr. Miller, of Lee, Scott and Wise, of a preamble and resolution, the reception or consideration of which was refused by a unanimous vote of the house, that body indefinitely postponing the subject, nem. con.

The preamble and resolution are as follows: WHEREAS. It has been represented that many of the people of the United States are in favor of terminating the war now unhappily existing between the Confederate States and the United States, and have so expressed themselves in primary meetings and conventions, and that some of the northern states, through their legislatures, have been proposing measures looking to a termination of the present war; be it, therefore,

Resolved. That a committee be appointed for the purpose of inquiring into any action on the part of any of the people of the United States, whether in primary meetings, conversations, or through legislative bodies, relative to a termination of the present war, and whether such action has been taken by any part of the people of the United States in adopting such measures and recommendations not inconsistent with the honor of the state or of the Confederate States, as would tend to bring about an armistice between the two nations and a fair and honorable termination of the war.

Mr. Morgan, of Marion, moved the indefinite postponement of this preamble and resolution, whereupon they were summarily squelched, as above stated.

East Tennessee.

One other element in the situation deserves special mention, and that is the local East Tennesseans. Under General Order No. 15, the entire loyal population is being made an auxiliary of the most powerful kind. In this portion of the State the organization has been effected so that now the number armed and ready for service is fully fifteen thousand. In addition to the National Guard for home defense, large numbers are enlisting in the volunteer service. Col. Crawford, who is forming an artillery regiment, gets recruits as fast as he can provide for them, having already procured eight hundred; and on yesterday alone, Lieut. Col. Brownlow received twenty-six for his regiment, the 9th Tennessee cavalry. This is very encouraging, as showing that the mass of the people of East Tennessee are ready to do something more than talk for their country. While this is true of the great body, there are many of the leading men of Knoxville who are indulging in a northern copperhead species of Unionism. The Bulletin has been discussing the everlasting nigger question, telling them in plain words that slavery is dead. They do not like it; they claim to be provost marshals, to adjutant generals, to generals themselves, that the country was not ready for this sort of thing; but the Bulletin kept on until it had said all it had to say on the subject.

In East Tennessee, as in Kentucky, Ohio and everywhere else, we have two kinds of Union men—the genuine, who as General Shackelford expressed it, stand by the government no matter what she does, and the false, who plead its flag but

Scott and Pegg's cavalry have been driving Bragg and Woolford about the country yesterday and to-day, but this afternoon the tables were turned, and the rebels were driven back from Philadelphia and Sweetwater.

LEAVENWORTH, Oct. 8.
Special to Chicago Tribune.—I have just received a letter from A. McDonald to his brother in this city, dated Port Scott, Oct. 7th, which contains the following startling news:

PORT SCOTT, Kansas, Oct. 7.
A messenger, Lieut. Tappan, of Blunt's staff, has just arrived from Baxter's Spring. He says all the staff and body guards have been captured, including the commander, Lieut. Pond, as Baxter's Spring.

It is not certain that the General has escaped, but he had got away ten miles when Tappan left.

Every available man has left, or is leaving this place. The rebels are under Quantrell, Gordon and Hunter, and number 1,400, and are marching on this place. Whether they will slaughter and kill no one knows. Henning and Curtis of the staff have been taken. Curtis' horse was shot. Intense excitement here. There is no danger of Port Scott being taken, as we are abundantly able to protect this point.

The Richmond Enquirer of to-day contains the following:

MISSIONARY RIDGE, Oct. 5.
We opened upon Chattanooga at 1 A. M. from Lookout mountain and points along our line. Our shells exploded in the enemy's camp, as well as in the city, setting fire to one house.

The enemy replied briskly from Moccasin point to our mortars on Lookout, and feebly from Star fort. The firing still continues.

October 6.
The Tennessee river is rising rapidly. It has swept away the lower portion bridge of the enemy, and submerged the tunnel bridge.

Major Mitchell, Chief Quartermaster General of Longstreet's corps died last night.

There has been no firing on either side up to 11 o'clock to-day.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8.
General Grant has made an important speech on American affairs, which was, on the whole, conciliatory and friendly to the North.

The Times says: "Earl Russell, in his speech relative to the iron-clads in the Mercury, is interpreted as meaning that the vessels will be detained even if the existing law is in their favor, so that Parliament may be called upon to press measures for the purpose."

"The directors of the Great Eastern have issued a report showing that more capital must be provided, or the company will be dissolved."

European politics are unimportant. Earl Russell has made an important speech on foreign affairs, to wit, in Scotland. He referred at considerable length to the recognition of the Confederacy in England, and answered some of the imputations brought by the people of the Confederacy, particularly the speech of Senator Sumner. He also replied to the complaint of the south in regard to the recognition of the blockade, and asserted that, although self-interest demanded that England should break it, she prefers the course of honor, as it would have been infamous to break it.

He showed that the government had not sufficient evidence against the Alabama to detain her until after she sailed, and explained the difficulties in the way of interference with such cases. He drew a line between ordinary vessels equipped for war purposes, and steam raucers which are themselves formed for acts of offense, and might be used without even touching the honor of the state or of the Confederate States, as would tend to bring about an armistice between the two nations and a fair and honorable termination of the war.

Mr. Morgan, of Marion, moved the indefinite postponement of this preamble and resolution, whereupon they were summarily squelched, as above stated.
